THIS SUNDAY'S REFLECTION

What is most striking about the readings this week is their view of what it takes to join Christ the King in his greatness and glory.

Christ's kingship was manifest in suffering and death, in love and not in power. Real kingly glory was more present in Christ's passion and loving death than in all David's pomp and power.

To be partaker of David's kingly greatness a person had to be a great warrior or a great politician, a very wise or wealthy person or a someone of royal blood. That was David's world.

But it is not the world of the King of Kings on the cross. Look at the thief being crucified with Christ. He has nothing going for him. He has no power, no wealth, no greatness of his own to recommend him to the King. He is just dying in his sins on the cross.

But as he is dying, he turns his suffering to Christ and opens himself. Remember me, Lord, when you come into your kingdom.

And Christ replies. Today you will be with me, the King, in heaven.

Remember us too, Lord, in your world. Draw us to the inner circle of the real King.
