When I was preparing myself for today's homily I found a very interesting article on happiness by Scott Young. He asked: «How many times have you caught yourself thinking that you would be happy when/if? "I'll be happy when I achieve my goal." "I'll be happy if I get more money." "I'll be happy when I have a boyfriend/ girlfriend/ spouse." "I'll be happy if I have better friends" ». Then he sharply observes: «The problem is that solving problems doesn't make you happier. Happiness isn't reality but a way of interpreting reality. If you can't find happiness right now, then solving a million problems won't uncover it. » Then he sums up with a Buddhist quote: "There is no way to happiness. Happiness is the way." Challenges and problems create the means for growth and happiness not the obstacles to them.

At first it seemed to me very enlightening! That is what Jesus meant when he said: "Blessed are the poor, those who mourn, who hunger and thirst etc." You are happy in any kind of circumstances, just look at the difficulties as an opportunity for growth and more happiness! Just change your mind, your way of viewing the situation. But then I realised that it can be done all by myself, without anybody's help! All is needed is just a little shift in focus in my mind! And I asked myself: is it really what Jesus meant? Why then does the prophet Zephaniah say: "Seek the Lord, seek humility"? There must be something more than that in Jesus' answer!

To St Paul and St Matthew, Jesus' faithful disciples, to be poor, weak means to be chosen by God. Here is the first difference: God plays an important role in our happiness! Moreover, according to the beatitudes our dependence on others seems to be an indispensable condition for happiness! Why is it so?

We may think that offering help to others is noble, but accepting help from others is humiliating. While the former underlines our ability in something, the latter points out to our weakness in something! It's embarrassing!

Not in the eyes of God! He created people different on purpose: so that they may exchange their gifts, so that they may give and receive, so that they may be interdependent on each other. You can give only when there is somebody who is willing to accept the gift. Whenever such connections between people are opened, we are happy! We can offer something to others and be completed by others; we can love and be loved in return!

What is your beauty worth when there is nobody to admire it? What is your talent worth if there is nobody to whom you can serve with it? The world is full of promising, brilliant people whose talents nobody appreciated and who ended up taking drugs or drinking alcohol!

Really happy are those who are in friendship with God and people. Happy are those in whom God lives and in whose hearts there is place for others. The situations described in beatitudes are not mind-switches but rather heart-openers: they open the gates to human hearts. Every situation in which we have to depend on somebody else is a chance to inviting God to our lives, it is a chance to be friends with somebody else.

Our hell begins whenever we try to be independent from everybody, when we think that we can do it on our own; when we feel powerful enough to do it by ourselves. Then our happiness is over. The devil claimed such independence and power at the beginning of times and ended up as the most unhappy creature in the universe. There is no happiness without God! There is no happiness without others! Happiness is like a river that springs out from God and flows from heart to heart! Are you ready to let it flow through your heart?

Fr. Janusz Roginski, S.A.C.
